

Music Library Notes

issue no. 18 November/December 2017

Music Library
8:00 a.m. – 7:00 p.m.
Monday-Friday

New DVD on composing for film, new music business books!

New DVD: Score: A Film Music Documentary

Click the cover to view a trailer for this new DVD about film music! ←

Here is an excerpt from the New York Times review by Andy Webster:

“The greats are here, either discussed or appearing on camera themselves: Max Steiner (whose orchestral flourishes enriched “King Kong”); Alex North (of “A Streetcar Named Desire,” whom the film credits with ushering jazz into scores); John Barry (whose James Bond theme would influence spy films in perpetuity); and giants on their own mountaintop, Bernard Herrmann and Ennio Morricone. (What, no Elmer Bernstein or Erich Wolfgang Korngold? But why quibble?) More recent innovators, like Trent Reznor (“The Social Network”), Danny Elfman (Tim Burton’s “Batman”) and Rachel Portman (“Race”), speak eloquently. John Williams (“Jaws,” “Star Wars”) casts a very long

And the winner of last month’s trivia question drawing is.....

Margaret Geoffrion! She guessed rightly that the accomplished golfer among your music professors is Dr. Bruce Johnston!

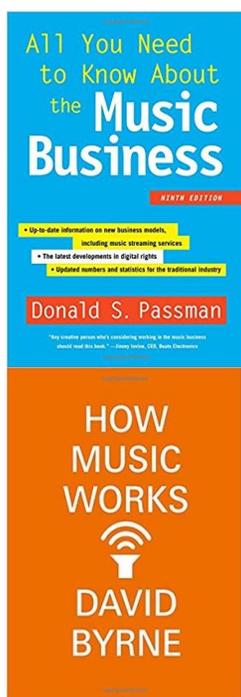

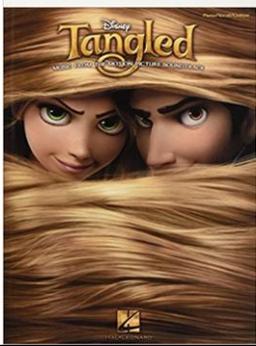

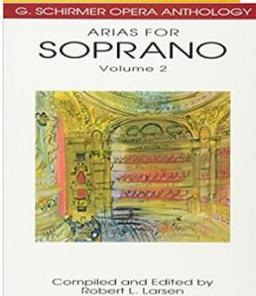

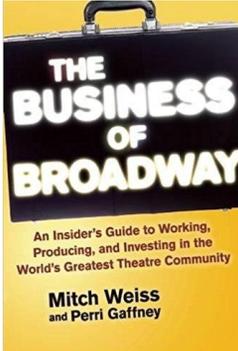

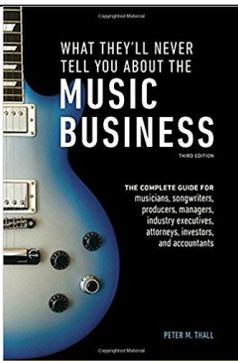

You don’t have to guess right to win the prize. All guessers’ names go into the drawing. 😊

And now... it’s time... for a NEW TRIVIA QUESTION!

Who among your music faculty/staff

Other New Items:

shadow.
 Inordinate time is spent with Hans Zimmer, whose symphonic-synthesizer scores define the current action-spectacle template. But he rightly says film composers are “one of the last people on earth” who regularly employ orchestra musicians. “Without us,” he adds, “the orchestra might disappear,” which would be “such a loss to humanity.” And who can argue?”
 New York Times, June 15, 2017

Coffee every day ☺
 during Finals Week!

Merry
 X-mas!

started directing at age 17, used to make pottery, and strongly considered majoring in Art in college???

Send guesses to phillipsc@obu.edu

Books may be checked out over the break. Please request January 16, 2018 due date!